

Leo Buring

Eden Valley Riesling 2003

Since the purchase of Chateau Leonay in 1945, Leo Buring has built an unparalleled reputation for quality Riesling production in the Clare and Eden Valleys.

Riesling expresses its growing conditions like no other varietal. The combination of climate, soil, aspect and location add up to create slightly different but discernable characters in the Rieslings of each region.

For this reason, Leo Buring creates a Riesling from the Clare Valley and one from Eden Valley. These wines share similar attributes: a clean fresh flavour and the ability to age, but with very different characters.

The 2003 Leo Buring Eden Valley Riesling shows the pronounced lime and floral characters reminiscent of its region.

Eden Valley

Vintage Conditions

The refreshing mild and even conditions coupled with the long early autumn provided ideal ripening conditions throughout late February and March. The later and cooler ripening period in the Eden Valley developed an array of subtle fruit flavours and complexing floral notes. Harvesting occurred from late March through to early April.

Winemaker Comments: Matthew Pick

Colour

Pale straw with a hint of green hue.

Nose

Fresh lime and fruit pastel notes with hints of cardamom spice and dried kaffir lime leaf.

Palate

The palate displays an initial rush of lime/lemon sorbet characters coupled with fresh honey suckle nectar. Tingling fruity notes persist and are married with clean, crisp, natural acidity.
